THE WOOL TRADE.

Friday Evening.

The sales of the week have progressed with so little fluctuation that there is little to say which is not satisfactory regarding the course of prices. All good fine wools which, unfortunately, but naturally are scarce at this late stage of the season, have sold, and the market and general trade has shown a 5 per cent. advance. Good scourers have also improved their position to about a similar extent, and the demand for such parcels has been very strong. As usual unskirted, badly got-up, and seedy lines have not participated in the improvement, and only has participated in the price increase, but they have experienced a marked improvement due to the selling agents as to the bales, who however have themselves greatly to blame for the results of carelessness and slovenly get-up.

The highest price for grey merino during the week was 94d obtained for the following:—
1,112 bales, weight 16 lbs., 10 oz., 16d.
1,000 fine Merino, 16 lbs., 10 oz., 16d.

Balanced as follows:—

Season. Balances.

1898-1899 1,114

1899-1900 21,641

1900-1901 26,585

Total to December 31 17,690

allowing Englishmen, he upbraided them for that, having secured from their colonies men who could shoot and ride.

When I mentioned foot at the wicket or the mud, don't eat the goals.

The ring is taken out of the sarcasm by the fact that the younger nations are just as much devoted to cricket and football as the mother country is. This very day, for instance, all Australia is feeling a lively interest in the progress of the fourth test match between the English cricketers and the Australians. Thousands strong the Sydney Cricket Ground every day, and the news is generally awaited by other thousands in every city and town in the Commonwealth. On holidays and on other days after work is over, the public parks are occupied by couples and members of the younger nations either playing cricket themselves or watching others. When the season changes footballers take the place of cricketers, and we content our souls with them just as heartily as do the people of England. If love of athletics be a crime or a mark of degeneration, we in Australia can boast no superiority. We are all tattered with the same brush, and it will take a greater than Mr. Kipling to persuade us that we should set to work at once and remove what he considers the stain.

A greater than Mr. Kipling summarised the position in the well-known saying that the battle of Waterloo was won on the playing-fields of Eton. Of course there were comparatively few of the thousands who fought in that epoch-making battle who had joined in the games of the famous college; but in other parts of the United Kingdom they had exercised their bodies and trained them to require skill and strength and perseverance. Many of the hockey, cricket, football, or golf, one or other of whom had been familiar to the soldiers, where Wellington had to victory. They had learnt how to bear hard knocks and to obey orders.

Prepared for either fortune, they had been taught some of the village games, others on the playing-fields of Eton or Harrow, to accept victory with a generous moderation, or defeat with stubborn determination. The habits of discipline and endurance thus early inculcated fitted them in after-life to do their best valiantly in any circumstances. Pride in physical prowess may be condemned by the philosophers, who blind themselves to the actual force of this feeling in men on whose physical prowess success or failure in the last instance depends. The love of sport in itself is not unworthy of a great nation, as long as the sport is not mean or cruel. A great cricketer, for instance, must have quick eyes, a mind trained to meet sudden emergencies, muscles moulded to obey his will at a moment's notice. Often the direction of the field, the change in the mode of attack, the employment of devices for the dismissal of a redoubtable opponent, or the resolute and determined to such ends—will make the game be called generally a "fanned fool," or to condemn a slyly foolish people who have the taste and the comprehension to admire his performance.

Personal equation has much to do in the matter. In his autobiographical sketch of his youth, Mr. Rudyard Kipling let it be seen that he had no sympathy with athleticism. It is, of course, possible that the cult of athleticism be carried too far, men may give up to cricket or football the time and attention which could be employed elsewhere with greater benefit to mankind. Nobody will be prepared to defend the attitude of mind which impels a man to regard the greatest cricketer as the greatest fighter of his acquaintance as the highest expression of human excellence. But it is no deduction from the merits of a great man that he was a notable cricketer, or that he loves to watch a football match. Not one of the present commissioners of sports would be likely to retain, when he showed his soldiers that he excelled in sports as well as in generalship. Men may pay if they are to work to the full extent of their power, and happy is the nation, like our own, which makes its play a fitting prelude to the hardest work—which teaches discipline and endurance in the very moments of relaxation.

DEATH OF A PIONEER GOLD MINER.

On Wednesday last there died at Maryland Mills, Mr. George Hunt, who claimed that he discovered gold in this colony before Bradfords did. Hunt's story was that he had been at the White Horse Inn, London, with the ex-explorers, Mr. and Mrs. Zetia by now deceased, and that he had been called to the duty, as he was then, of carrying the mail to the South African colonies. He had been engaged in this work for some time, and had been sent to the Cape, where he had been a postman at Port Elizabeth, and had been promoted to the rank of postmaster.

along the streets it rose over the barbedwires, and in some instances premises in the vicinity were lightly flooded.

Earthquake Shocks.—The Government Astronomer in South Australia, Sir Charles Todd, yesterday reported that at Black Rock the telegraph operators had received news of earthquake shocks at George Town and several neighbouring stations. The shocks were apparently travelling westward, east of the coast.

The ring is taken out of the sarcasm by the fact that the younger nations are just as much devoted to cricket and football as the mother country is. This very day, for instance, all Australia is feeling a lively interest in the progress of the fourth test match between the English cricketers and the Australians.

The Late Mr. W. T. Poole.—At a special meeting of the Redfern Council held on Thursday evening for the purpose of electing the Mayor for the ensuing year, attention was called to the recent death of ex-Alderman Poole and the various addressees sitting at the table.

Mr. Poole had been ill during the late week, and had been admitted to the district during the time that he had been the office of Mayor and alderman. It was unanimously decided to forward a letter of condolence to the widow and family of the deceased gentleman.

A Man Assaulted.—A man named Henry Smith who resides at Park-road, Narrabeen, had reported to the police at 10 p.m. on Saturday evening that he was walking home when a man suddenly confronted him and demanded what money he had. Another man struck him violently. Another man struck him behind, knocking him down. He was then beaten, and immediately afterwards Mr. Watson (N.S.W.) admitted to the North Sydney Hospital suffering from fractured ribs and internal injuries. Detective Walker is making inquiries.

Robbed in Hyde Park.—Shortly after 8 a.m. yesterday Constable Gilmore found a man John Williams sitting on a seat in Hyde Park. He appeared to be very ill, and, in answer to the question as to what had caused his illness, he said that he had been walking home when a number of the thousands who fought in the games of the famous college, but in other parts of the United Kingdom they had exercised their bodies and trained them to require skill and strength and perseverance.

Mr. Kington, in reply to the arguments advanced during the general discussion on the matter, said that the Allies were strictly limited.

Great Britain and Japan, the leader of the Opposition, had agreed to the terms proposed by the Government in the matter of the Anglo-German Agreement in regard to China, Viscount Cranborne said, was still operative.

A debate was raised on the treaty.

Viscount Cranborne said that the treaty had originated solely from commercial reasons and from anxiety to maintain the status quo.

The policy of spheres of influence in China was unobjectionable Viscount Cranborne said, and All China ought to be open to commerce and enterprise.

The conditions for taking action by the Allies were strictly limited.

Great Britain and Japan, the leader of the Opposition, had agreed to the terms proposed by the Government in the matter of the Anglo-German Agreement in regard to China, Viscount Cranborne said, was still operative.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the leader of the Opposition, said: "We are in substantial agreement with Japan as to policy but we differ in our methods. The aims of the treaty might have been attained by the interchange of Diplomatic Notes, instead of an explicit undertaking of great obligations."

Mr. Kington, in reply to the arguments advanced during the general discussion on the matter, said that the Government had refrained from expressing an opinion about the advisability of the Government establishing the iron industry.

An intervention by Mr. Glynn (S.A.) drew from the Minister the remark that he had been asked to consider the proposal.

COMMONWEALTH NOTES.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER)

MELBOURNE, Friday.

In the House of Representatives this morning Mr. Barton, replying to Mr. Cook (N.S.W.), said that he would have no objection to laying on the table the documents of the Anglo-German Agreement which had been going on with the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company for a uniform agreement in regard to the use of the cable. As, however, these negotiations were still in progress he did not think that the correspondence should be made public at the present time.

Co-operation of the tariff was resumed in Committee of Ways and Means at division 6A. The House of Representatives voted to lay on the table the documents of the Anglo-German Agreement for the establishment of the iron industry in China, to come into operation when the industry is sufficiently established in the Commonwealth. Sir W. N. McMillan (N.S.W.) appealed to the Government to postpone the division, relating as it did to dates coming into force five years hence, and to lay on the table the documents of the Anglo-German Agreement.
